Strength in allies

What does it take to support diversity and inclusion in the workplace? We continue to examine and reassess the answers to that question – specifically, as they relate to women in the top echelons of the profession.

We do know that there's no one-size-fits-all approach for organizations. But we can implement best practices as a matter of strategy. We can focus on leadership and boardroom diversity. We can encourage and support women's leadership at the institutional level.

And each of us, as individuals, can develop our skill sets so that we are responsive, adaptive and gutsy in tackling the biggest challenges. The AICPA Women's Global Leadership Summit brings those opportunities to the fore, with guidance from pioneers who have carved paths for themselves. We can learn much from their insights, and you're invited to join us on the frontlines.

We look forward to seeing you Nov. 8–10 in Chicago or online.

Sincerely,

Kimberly Ellison-Taylor

Reshma Saujani
Founder/CEO
Girls Who Code

How to Fail First, Fail Hard and Fail Fast

Reshma Saujani is a serial failed politician. Strikingly, it is because of her failures she has built a national movement that is changing the conversation about women and technology. Recounting her personal narrative and lessons learned in this compelling, dynamic and earnest presentation, Saujani also weaves in stories of other accomplished women who have overcome roadblocks and forged new paths – women who have similarly learned to live authentic lives by taking risks and choosing to seek failure rather than fear it. Offering tools to improve resiliency and embark on new ideas, she ignites and inspires audience members to pursue risk and help reshape the country.
